Mutated wildlife roams freely in The Zone. Supposedly, the area is kept under lockdown by the military. However, the prospect of lucrative looting and treasure hunting has led a large number of opportunists known as Stalkers to jump fence into The Zone itself. These people are either operating for themselves, or in factions.

In the distant future, the protagonist (Alexander Kaidanovsky) works in an unnamed location as a "Stalker" who leads people through the "Zone", an area in which the normal laws of reality do not apply and remnants of seemingly extraterrestrial activity lie undisturbed among its ruins. The Zone contains a place

It is unknown how these men entered the Zone or why they are there. It is possible that they were stationed in the city of Kabul during the Zone's expansion to that area. They are featured in the novel S.T.A.L.K.E.R: Southern Comfort. There are hints to the 1979 film Apocalypse Now as an inspiration for the Tribe. That probably means that the fictional Marines took matters into their own hands under a charismatic leader.

The two English language novels, Southern Comfort and Northern Passage, can be found but may be difficult to find in their original STALKER format. They focus on a minor character from CoP, Captain Tarasov, and send him to “the new Zone” in Afghanistan. They’re not bad, but if you’re hoping to see more of Chernobyl they’re not set there.
